Third International Multidisciplinary Conference on PEDIATRIC SEDATION

The Third International Multidisciplinary Conference on Pediatric Sedation will provide the necessary education to safely administer optimal sedation to children. This conference is an opportunity for practitioners to convene with research leaders and share current practices with experts from around the United States.

Pediatric sedation for procedures outside the operating room is an emerging subspecialty. Which medications, techniques, locations, or personnel are optimal for the sedation of children is not universally agreed upon. However, millions of infants and children worldwide require sedation each year. Hospitals, office-based physicians, and dentists are struggling to provide this service.

Educational Objectives:

At the end of the conference, participants should be able to:

- Describe the controversies and common practices in pediatric sedation in the U.S. and internationally.
- Discuss the various sedation delivery modes at a variety of institutions.
- Describe the components of what credentialing includes.
- Discuss issues related to propofol, ketamine, etomidate, and dexmedetomidine use for pediatric sedation.
- Identify important factors to bill procedural sedation.
- Describe the core competencies for pediatric sedation.
- Discuss general properties of the most common sedative agents used in pediatrics.
- Describe the process used to determine how to safely sedate a patient.
- Identify the equipment needed for sedation in the ICU.
- Describe the benefits and limitations of nitrous oxide sedation for procedural sedation.
- Discuss decision making from the perspective of different subspecialties and institutions that practice pediatric procedural sedation.
